

Activity: Google Review Reflections

When students are in a space designed to provide them with the best experience, every part of them should feel as if they are welcomed and that they matter because we have communicated that to them both verbally and non-verbally. When they leave the classroom, we want them anticipating the next time they will return and we want them to share the amazing experience with those that matter the most to them. Providing students with constant opportunities to provide you with feedback, on how things are going in the classroom, is one way to track if we are meeting the needs of all of our students. If your classroom was a popular restaurant, what would your Google review say about the way your establishment does business? How do you plan to ensure that you are constantly and consistently providing 5 star service to all of your guest?

In Your Classroom:

1. Make copies of the Google Review Reflection and distribute to students.
2. At conclusion of each class period, allow students to reflect over class period (students can submit anonymously)
3. Use students reflections as a tool to engage students in a conversation about the glows, grows, and goals of the classroom.
